

JPro Services - keeping homes and offices safe and secure

We all want our homes and offices to be safe and secure but with the safety and security services remaining to be an unregulated industry, how do we know what to look for in a company? Local fire safety and security specialist firm, JPro Services Ltd, are doing what they can to bring peace of mind to their customers.

Jason prides himself on giving people value for money and in this unregulated industry, JPro ensure that they have as much accreditation as possible to back up their business and set them apart from other companies offering similar services.

JPro Services was originally set up in 2006 so expert fault finding engineer, Jason Wallace, could contract his services to international firm Kidde. Following the end of this contract he decided to grow the business to cover not just fire safety, but also security solutions to buildings.

Jason's wife, Colette, initially joined him in the firm on a part-time basis but soon became full-time as she helped build up the business, including their team of engineers and consultants in fire assessment and training. Colette herself has even undergone extensive training so she can also deliver some of the services to clients and has considerable knowledge in fire and security matters.

JPro Services moved from Tonbridge to Edenbridge last year as Jason and Colette find Edenbridge to be an excellent base to be able to service their clients in South East London and Kent. All their engineers are multi-skilled and have fully equipped vans so they are able to deal with all sorts of issues whilst they are at a client's premises, saving the hassle of another engineer call out.

The service you get from JPro is very black & white - there are no hidden extras.

Until now, JPro's main customers have been in the commercial sector, looking after Care Homes, Schools, Community Centres and offices. They are now looking to build their domestic client base and have a great range of products and services to make our homes more safe and secure.

"November and December are traditionally the busiest months for burglars as homes are filled with great gifts ready for Christmas" says Colette, "and many people don't realise that if they have an alarm but don't use it, insurance companies can send in engineers to check the alarm history at the point of a claim and choose not to pay out if the alarm hasn't been in use but is listed on the insurance schedule."

I don't know about you, but this certainly struck home with me as I have been in this position in the past but not realising the potential impact if I had needed to make a claim.

Home security need not be expensive and to have an alarm serviced by JPro costs just £65, and, if you choose, annual monitoring fees start from £99. Some people are put off having an alarm installed as they assume the systems are too complicated to use. JPro can supply and install easy-to-use systems so you don't need to be frightened by the thought of using one.

If you would like to find out more about the services on offer from JPro, they would love to hear from you. Call the office on 01732 356242 or visit their website at:

www.jproservices.co.uk